

Samuel Chang is the president and co-founder of Midstory, a nonprofit media thinkhub that progresses the Midwest narrative through educational multimedia, solutions-oriented research and young adult/youth programming. He received his B.A. from the Princeton University School of Public and International Affairs, where he also earned a certificate in East Asian Studies. After spending years on the East Coast, Samuel returned to Toledo with a passion to uplift and influence the Midwest region's voice in the national dialogue. He previously managed a prison education nonprofit that provided educational resources and support to incarcerated people in seven states across the East Coast. Samuel is also a trustee for Live Arts Toledo and the Ohioana Library.